Dowdeswell

Renowned for their quality construction and performance, Dowdeswell Engineering have been producing ploughing equipment for over 40 years - from the late Roger Dowdeswell producing bespoke equipment at the family farm at Radbourne in Warwickshire, to producing volume equipment at the Stockton factory in Warwickshire.

A typically suitable piece for the current owner-operator or contractor is the 105 Series plough unit, released a little over a year ago with a clean and simple build having straight forward adjustments for the operator.

But why would you plough with minimum tillage seeming so popular?

- This could be down to a simple case of controlling weeds or disease build up; soil is very good at doing this for you as long as you use depth.
- Ploughs will bring fresh soil to the growing area offering a stale seed bed for positive crop establishment.
- Ploughing will help with drainage of the fields which will promote stronger crop rooting and minimises rot in wet seasons.
- Ploughs can be used during any post cultivations that coincide with wet weather (not something easily achieved with a tined machine).

Also, in the case of the Dowdeswell machines, they are as British as can be, with both design and manufacture taking place at the Stockton factory.
